Shows Fine Record Made On Delivery Of Liberty Motors

WASHIN 17TON, Nov. 28.—Liberty motors were being produced at the rate of 150 a day when the armistice was signed, said Lieut. H. H. Emmons, U. S. N., chief of the engine production department of the aircraft production board, at the war department in a lecture attended by Secretary Baker and other army officials.

Deliveries of Liberty motors in October reached 5,297, Lieut. Emmons said, a larger number of motors than English and French factories had been able to deliver in any one moath. a larger number of motors than English and French factories had been able to deliver in any one month.

Detailing the history of the Liberty engine. Lieut. Emmons said, only two changes had been made in design since its original conception. One of these was to substitute a "force feed" system and the other was an alteration in the connecting red to give more play. All other changes, he said, were in power and were the result of instructions from experts connected with Gen. Pershing's staff. The initial engine delivered 330 horse power. After 300 had been manufactured and the builders were beginning to swing into quantity production, the officer said, the authorities in France advised that more power was needed. The engine was "stepped up" to 375 horse power, necessitating additional strength in certain parts. To illustrate the effect of these orders. Lieut. Emmons said that they required changes back to the steel foundries which were called upon to change the specifications of the raw steel. Five hundred of the 375 horse power motors had been produced when Gen. Pershing asked for another increase in power of for motors developing 400 horse power.

Despite these difficulties statistics were quoted showing that 1,100 motors had been delivered on May 29, "one year after the first scratch of the pencil toward the design of the engine." Up to last Friday, the officer said, the deliveres totaled 31,813.
